

Winston DeMartini organized the Harlem RBI Fundraiser Clinic held on November 8, 2014. The Harlem RBI is a charity that helps inner-city kids learn the game of baseball. Winston collected used baseball equipment for this charity last Spring. For the clinic, Winston was able to get two former MLB baseball players (Alex Trezza & Al Sontag) to donate their time, and he got the Locust Valley Boys and Girls Club to donate gym space. Winston set up an account at Eventbrite to process credit card payments for participants, with all of the proceeds going to the Harlem RBI charity. Winston advertised the clinic through the schools, the Glenwood-Glen Head Little League, Unlimited Sports Action, and the Grenville Baker Boys and Girls Club. He invited kids from the Harlem organization to attend, and about 10 kids and 4 adults drove out in a van. For some kids it was their first time on Long Island! Several friends helped out as assistants. The clinic was 1.5 hours, and everyone had a good time.
